Enterprise Resident Re-Elected to the Board of Directors and as Officer of Intermountain Power Agency

R. Leon Bowler, representing the City of Enterprise on the Intermountain Power Agency Board of Directors, has been re-elected to serve on that Board and re-elected as Vice Chairman of the organization. Bowler has served as a director of IPA since 1977.

Other officers elected include Ray Farrell, Heber City, Chairman; Ted L. Olson, Cities of Ephraim and Fairview, Secretary; and Russell F. Fjeldsted, Logan City, Treasurer.

Other members of the IPA Board include Walter Meacham, Kaysville City; Robert O. Christiansen, Beaver City; and Edward Collins, Lehi City.

The Intermountain Power Agency is an organization of 23 Utah municipalities formed to finance, construct, operate and maintain the Intermountain Power Project. The Project generates enough electricity to supply the needs of more than 1.5 million homes.

Historically, the Project has been one of America's cleanest and most efficiently operated coal-based generating stations. Today, the Project has expanded its efforts to improve environmental performance to include reducing greenhouse gas emissions. The Project is investigating several strategies for off-setting, reducing and capturing and storing carbon dioxide emissions. The Project is also actively supporting the development of renewable energy resources in Utah.

The Intermountain Power Project includes a two-unit coal-fueled generating station located near Delta, Utah, two transmission systems, a microwave communication system and a railcar service center, all built as a joint undertaking by 36 utilities in Utah and California.
